Many Fear That The Regulator Has Been Sent to Stop Everyone from Doing Anything without Permission, But Dealburt Fights Back and Wins

Dear Reader: In the post-financial-crisis apocalypse, many otherwise energetic investors, property and business owners, lenders, borrowers and entrepreneurs have retreated into inaction, out of fear of that all-knowing, all-seeing, and whatever-you-do- is-wrong Regulator. In this context, Dealburt rides to a free country's rescue, with a point-by-point rebuttal to the objections of fear.

Objection: I can't do that until The Regulator says I can.

Dealburt: Not true. Under our system, you can do anything that is not actually prohibited by law, by which The Regulator must abide, too.

Objection: But The Regulator might sue me anyway.

Dealburt: Before that would happen, you would have the opportunity to choose to accede to The Regulator's position, without suit. Anyway, if what you are doing accords with both the wording and the purpose of the law, why worry?

Objection: If this were a good idea, someone else would have thought of it.

Dealburt: I am someone else.

Objection: It isn't quite nice, if I learn a strategy from you which helps me achieve a more favorable tax, investment or financing outcome than others obtain.

Dealburt: Well, they should do it, too. Besides, our system of law is generally written to say, in essence, "If you do this, then the legal effect will be such-and-such." We all have the right to arrange our business dealings for the legal effect we want.

Objection: What will The Regulator think of your strategy?

Dealburt: What's not to like? We're helping the government accomplish what it's desperately seeking to accomplish, for strengthening banks and the economy.
